

Jack Be Nimble -- But, We Be Slow

SOLAR DAY ON SUNDAYS

For almost three months now a dedicated core groups of volunteers have, on most Sundays, been building 100 solar ovens that will be distributed in refugee camps, schools, and villages in and around Kabul. Two days ago we cut and pasted milar on cardboard panels to form the reflectors. We're "nearing the end", so says nimble Jack.

One volunteer is now in, and another is on his way to, New Zealand, hopefully not Christchurch. Susan and Jim are heading to South America to, among other things, track down tropical birds with a birdwatching group. That means there is room around the cutting tables for 3 - 4 more volunteers. Uncle Jack Needs You!!! --- this Sunday, from 9:30am to no later than 2 pm, at our warehouse near the Oakland airport. Send us an email if you can help. Don't forget the admonition of the Taliban leader who said, "Americans have the watches, but we have the time". Time is something we make. It's seldom something we have.

JACK IS IN THE NEWS

Sophie Braccini heard about Jack's solar cookers and thought it might make a good article for the LaMorinda weekly. In the process of interviewing Jack, she learned how he had offered to spearhead the solar cooker project for Trust In Education. To read the story click on the link below. Thank you Sophie and the Lamorinda weekly.

WARMING THE BODIES AND THE HEARTS

Basir and Maiwand are continuing to distribute clothing to families living in tent camps. They sent photos to me, this past few days, that I'm passing on to you. Who knows? Someone may see something they gave. That's happened once already. If it happens to you, let us know. We'll send you the photo.

Best Regards,

Budd
